Famous For:
Author of Screenformation, Abstract Objects, and The Marriage Syndrome.

Organisations/Memberships:
World Intelligence Network, ISI-Society, One-in-a-Thousand Society, Mensa, and several others. In my career I am a digital marketer, web developer, webmaster, editor, and publisher. My goals include more research and writing around screentime overuse issues and effects in society and in the lives of individuals.

Why work with IQ:
It's important to me to be in a community of like-minded individuals who have similar ways of looking at the world even when conclusions, values, and ideologies are completely different.

I try to use any opportunity to facilitate communications on fact-based studies, research and expert commentary on the negative impacts of screetime, and the special issues concerning children and screens. I believe this effort will help people realize their fullest potential.

Statement for the World:
As my book Screenformation (buy) shows, everyone can learn what it takes to achieve satisfaction, success and resourcefulness. Everyone can thrive by developing advanced emotinal intelligence. None of these are dependent on IQ. Inherited intelligence is a gift that should be used to the fullest for the good of others and of self. But it should not be the measure of a person, nor the criteria for thriving or not thriving in this life.

The gifts each one of us has must be developed with discipline and fortitude in order to accomplish anything worthwhile. I hope my book Screenformation and my communications in person and on social media reach people in ways that are constructive and helpful in their journeys.
